

THE REAL SHIFT

Agents Don't Shrink Your Team. They Change It.

Headcount stays flat in steady-state deployments. The job description doesn't.

Where The Work Actually Moves

Routine triage and cross-system summarization go to the agent first.
That's the boring 60% nobody wanted to own anyway.

Four Things Humans Do Instead

Exception handling. Vendor management. Judgment calls the agent flags but can't close. The job gets harder, not smaller.

Cycle Times Drop Where Triage Lived

Invoice processing and claims handling see 20 to 30% faster cycle times once routine steps stop waiting on a person.

The Agent Becomes The Hub, Not The Team

Triage, summarization, and routing all report through one system. The people around it make the calls it can't.

I Build Systems That Change The Job

Not ones that just cut headcount and call it done.
